

THE CLIMAX

WEDNESDAY, FEB. 22, 1936

—Rev. Dr. Young preached in Winchester Sunday.

—If you want handsome cut flowers, call on Brown. See his list.

—Editor is the first of the new year to have a telephone in his store. It is 34.

—Miss Mary Crawford, of Louisville, has had The CLIMAX sent to her at Hamilton College, Lexington.

—According to a decision of the Court of Appeals, druggists are now liable to a $50 fine for selling whiskey.

—Born, to Nellie Tooton, wife of Geo. Tooton, of Maysville, Mont., on the 29th of January, a 9 pound boy—Barnum F. Tooton.

—Master Commissioner Scott has now a fine proof, burglar proof safe in his office for the preservation of important legal papers.

—White & Bush say that "In Old Madrid," at opera house, Monday evening an equal to "A Trip to China Town" will be found or money refunded.

—Married, January 22nd, at the residence of the bride's father, near Union City, by Eld. W. S. Gaudin, Mr. James W. Cochran to Miss Charlotte East.

—Keep things at once as usual—no special service at Methodist church and meeting of Communion last Friday night.

—The examining trial of Smith Martin and his brother, after the shooting, with intent to kill Rutherford Todd, was held for the grand jury in the sun of $300.

—The mind reader came, he didn't see, for was limited, but he was offered a small quantity of stock of the crowd and left town soon as he could.

—The Central University Mandolin and Glee Club added to the graphophone phonograph gave an excellent entertainment at the court house, Friday night and cleared $20.

—Commissioner Scott will sell the Burial Home, corner Irvine and Third streets, at auction, Friday, 25th, by order of court, in the case of Parrish vs. Cunningham's administrator &c.

—Dr. W. T. Brooks has purchased of Dr. D. C. Lyman his interest in the drug store, and Dr. Lyman and family will go to Philadelphia tomorrow—Paris Kentucky Citizen.

—Mrs. S. F. Rock left from a chair in which she was standing near home on Broadway, Tuesday evening of last week, and broke the large window of the right arm, just above the wrist, but in improving satisfactory.

—The Board of Directors, stockholders, contractors and residents of the Speedwell, Kingston & Menards Turnpike Co., have been at longer hours for sometime but after having their wrongs righted in Judge Scott's court, everything is peace and brotherly love, and on the 1st Sunday in May, there will be a footbal game at Stadium 101-30 on Haycock Park.

Known Here.
James Beazley died in Lincoln county, January 18th, 1896, aged about 60 years. Buried at Lancaster. His wife was Miss Sallie Grimes, of Athens, Fayette county. He and wife had relatives in this county.

Dr. Jasper.
Recently this young physician has located in Richmond and opened an office in Collins building. He is a graduate of one of the best medical schools and has of late taken a post-graduate course. His experience covers nine years, the latter part of which time was spent in Bloomington, Illinois.

Didn't Come to Pass.
Wednesday's CLIMAX announced through its Waco correspondent that Miss Etta Chambers, daughter of Squire H. Clay Chambers, of College Hill, would on Thursday marry Mr. William Griffith. The time came but Griffith did not. The bride was not previously disappointed, as she converted the wedding supper into a party supper, and seemed as gay as the guests of the company. She is evidently fortunate in not becoming the wife of such an uncertain quantity.

Railroad Valuation.
Andlor Stone has forwarded to County Clerk White the valuation of railroads in Madison county for taxation, as follows: L. & N. (K. C. Division) from Kentucky River to Boone Gap, 27.91 miles, $228,518. Fort Estill to Point Look, 11.78 miles, $47,646. R. & N. L. & B., 28 miles, $194,000.

Richmond has 46 miles and Berea .77 miles of L. & N., but Richmond's net depot and other property puts the valuation $80,032; the Berea, $7,573. Berea has more land belonging to the railroad than has Richmond.

"Lord Grand High Everything Else."
At last meeting of the City Council, C. S. Powell was elected Chief of the Fire Department. He was already President of the Water & Light Co., of the Telephone Co., of the Powell-Turner Insurance aggregation, and many other concerns of equal weight and importance.

But as to the Fire Department, you can safely hypothesize your last summer's ax and let the proceeds thereof the indolent and giving and commanding of orders by everybody at a fire want to be tolerated for a brief moment. Somebody will get knocked down, and then the firemen will proceed with their work.

Death From Pure Carelessness.
Henry Grady, one of the most prominent men of Woodford county, and a model man in every way, was killed by a train near Versailles, one day last week. He was a friend from Danville was in a buggy driving out to his farm. He took no notice of the railroad crossing, although it was in plain view, and there was nothing to keep him from seeing the approaching train. Besides it was regular train time. More than that, some parties in a vehicle were standing on the pike, just across the railroad, waiting for the approaching train to pass, and tried to stop him, by calling to him, but he neither heard nor looked. Just as the horse got on the track, Mr. Grady saw the train, then within a few steps of it, he hit the horse which sprang forward, pulling the buggy on the track just in time to catch the engine square on the side of the buggy. The buggy was torn to pieces, the Danville friend painfully hurt, and Mr. Grady instantly killed. Pure carelessness causes many times more deaths than pure accidents.

30 Prisoners 30.

Jailer Wages has thirty prisoners. Of these, 13 are for felony. Some craps shooters are among the others.

May Die.
Mr. Evans, of Danville, hurt when Mr. Grady was killed at Versailles, is thought to be dying. He is at Versailles.

Doing Well.
Dr. Bender is well located in room No. 4 at Hotel Glyndon and says he is doing well. His proposed salaries for extraction of teeth is bringing in the people.

New Dressmakers.
The Misses Leavell, of Lexington, will open a fashionable dressmaking establishment in this place. They come highly recommended in their line by Chalmers and Todd and Mrs. Curry, in whose employment they have been.

Look at These Prices.
CLIMAX and Cincinnati Weekly Enquirer, one year, $1.35.

CLIMAX and weekly Courier-Journal, one year, $1.30.

CLIMAX and three-week New York World, one year, $1.70.

CLIMAX and any other newspaper or magazine cheaper than you can possibly get it from the publishers.

Time Moved Up Nineteen Minutes.
The morning train, North, changed time Sunday morning, passing Richmond 10 minutes earlier than usual. The time is now 3:19, instead of 3:38 as heretofore. Keep this in mind, or you'll get left.

Horse Sale.
Monday, 21st, was bought by R. P. Fox at the Fairview & Rose sale, Lexington, for $1,500. Sired by Eagle Bird, dam Lady Maud, 2:18. The horse was a bargain.

At the Woodward & Shaulkin sale four days, 321 horses sold for $43,350, and was regarded as a good sale.

Rubie Sent to Jail.
Did anybody ever hear of such a thing before? No. Well, this unheard-of performance was performed here in Richmond yesterday. It was this way, Mr. George W. Park, near Speedwell, has a handsome motorcycle baby bike. It had come loose in the back. He sent it to the CLIMAX office for repairs. When done, we sent it over to his daughter, Mrs. Wagers, wife of the jailer.

"In Old Madrid."
White & Bush promise that in the production of "In Old Madrid," on next Monday evening, the theatre goes with witless one of the best comedies that any age or literature has produced. It is modern, bright, sparkling and witty. Its plot is one of the most ingenious and original. Its fun bubbles up spontaneously. These are never strained but grow naturally out of the story and are always vivid and lifelike.

That New Train.
Charles Burman, the colored giant, who constructed two miniature trains, a freight and passenger, last summer, has completed an improved locomotive, tender and car. They are on exhibition at Walter & Nelson's, down on lower Main. All the latest improvements in ventilators, sand boxes, bells and the like are incorporated. The three pieces are nearly six feet long.

Died In St. Louis.
William K. Estill died at the Baptist Sanatorium in St. Louis, Mo., Wednesday, January 20th, 1896, aged 60 years. Buried at Lancaster. His wife was Miss Sallie Grimes, of Athens, Fayette county. He and wife had relatives in this county.

Lock No. 7.
The work on lock No. 7, at High Bridge, has already begun in earnest. The side-track leading from the C. & S. has been completed, and the Government boat Gen. Lee, making regular trips to High Bridge weekly with tools and other supplies to be used in the construction of the lock. Excavations are being made on the Mercer side, where the lock will be located. About the first of March the river will be drained and the dam raised. From two hundred to three hundred men will be employed on the work regularly. This will be a big help to High Bridge as there will be no commissary or boarding house attachments—Nicholasville Journal.

Nobody But Printers Make Mistakes?
One day last week, Commissioner Scott employed a man to remove his bar graph from the office over the Court House to his office in the court house. Several men were sent with ropes, skids, crowbars and the like to bring the safe. Governor McCreary has a safe in the same office. His name is on the front. T. J. Scott is the name on the other. The men rushed up into the office, grabbed a safe and yanked it down stairs, across the street and into the court house. Just then the commissioner discovered Governor McCreary's name and called their attention to it. They could not retract their steps and exchange safes. Those men can't understand why printers make mistakes.

A Powerful Gue.
Deputy Sheriff Joe Deatherage was on a white oak tree, two feet in diameter, with a bullet hole entirely through the center. Merchant Brannaman and Iveryman Parrish said they saw the man fire the shot. One of them was in a position to see the bark fly off the far side of the tree as the bullet emerged. The bullet passed on, went through an iron plank of a stable wall and into the opposite wall, from which it was cut. The bullet was not so much as battered. But it was a steel bullet, about 30 or 32 calibre, and more than an inch long. These are short ones, and such as is used in the German army. It will shoot three miles. It belonged to a detective from Virginia. The detective came out to this county in search of a man who had bought a $200 diamond in Virginia, paid $50 on it and left. He found the man, collected the $50, and $50 forepenses.

A Big Catcher.
The Asher Lumber Company filed this week a statement of its condition with the clerk as required by law. The capital stock is one million dollars paid in. They own real estate to the value of $275,040; personal property worth $1,045,175; they owe debts to the amount of $28,251 and have $47,042 owing to them. The capital stock is divided into ten thousand shares with the following stockholders: W. R. Bart, 4000 shares; C. W. Bart, 10 shares; M. L. Brabb, 30 shares; R. M. Radell, 1000 shares; I. G. Chappin, 610 shares; I. H. Gilbert, 180 W. M. Beckner, 210 shares—Winchester Democrat.

County Judge Burman now has a telephone in his office.

A Change In Doctors.

Dr. Perry of Foxton has gone to Philadelphia to take a post-graduate course. He will be gone till May 1st. Dr. C. E. Poynter, of Waco, has gone down to Foxton to fill Dr. Perry's place.

State Grand Commandery.
Richmond Commandery, No. 19, has begun arrangements to entertain the State Grand Commandery, which will convene in Richmond, Wednesday, May 27th. The adjutant, executive committee of Sir Knights has been appointed by the Commandery:

D. P. Arner.
R. C. Stockton.
Dr. J. M. Poynter.
J. H. Burman.
William Bennett.
R. C. H. Covington.
T. T. Covington.

The Executive Committee has appointed other committees, of Sir Knights to wit:

FINANCE.
R. C. H. Covington.
R. H. Thackeray.
William Bennett.
J. W. Herndon.

PROGRAM AND ENTERTAINMENT.
R. H. Burman.
J. Speed Smith.
A. W. Smith.

RECEPTION AND ACCOMMODATION.
T. T. Covington.
Samuel H. Stone.
C. E. Seary.

RECEPTION.
Dr. J. M. Poynter.
S. L. Midkiff.
Claude Smith.

MUSIC.
William Bennett.
E. F. Mitchell.
Grant E. Lilly.
J. C. Morgan.
J. A. Higgins.

This gathering of the best people in Kentucky in the town of Richmond is no small honor. Doubtless the citizens will duly appreciate it. Decorations should be in profusion, and everybody and everything about town should put on its best appearance. As matters of interest in connection with the Grand Commandery meeting arise, the public shall be duly notified.

Away On The Wings of Love.
Charles E. Hudson and Bettie R. Martin, elopers from Point Look, Ky., were married in Jeffersonville yesterday afternoon at 3 o'clock by Magistrate J. H. Hulse. They were accompanied by Miss Hattie G. Mitchell, who lives five miles from Richmond, Ky., and who had been visiting Miss Martin.

Mr. Hudson called at Miss Martin's house Wednesday evening and proposed to the young woman to flee with him to the Hoosier Grains Co. At 11 o'clock she aroused Miss Mitchell, who had retired, and asked if she would accompany her to Jeffersonville. Miss Mitchell announced her readiness and the trio slipped out. Mr. Hudson had a buggy in waiting and the party was quickly on its way to Junction City, twenty-five miles away. The rain was pouring, but a stormy night presented no terrors to the runaways. They reached Louisville yesterday morning and went to the Louisville Hotel and registered.

Miss Martin is a handsome girl, and the daughter of a widow. Her mother was strongly opposed to her marriage. Mr. Hudson is employed by a sewing machine company. The couple expected last night to go to Cincinnati and wait for the arrival of the train to Louisville. Miss Mitchell intended to accompany them—Louisville Times.

Circuit Court.
Circuit Court began Monday with a big docket. The equity docket comprises 215 cases including 43 appearances. The ordinary docket has 120 cases of which 85 are appearances.

Sixteen couples have found marriage to be a failure and want divorces. Of these four couples are white and twelve colored.

Only 29 commonwealth cases are on docket, none of these being of a very serious nature. The whole docket number 364 cases. A number of prisoners have been over to await the action of the Grand Jury and when all the indictments are returned the number of cases will probably reach 400.

The docket embraces several damage suits. Those of Leslie Pigg and George Collins, against Chief of Police Donohoe and bondsmen, have been mentioned; another suit is that of J. J. Eades and wife against the L. & N. road. One night last October Mrs. Eades alighted from the train at Ford. She alleges that her regular passage was obstructed by the Company's cars and she was obliged to pass around the depot. In the darkness she fell over a pile of lumber which she was placed there by the Company, and broke her arm. She sues for $2,500.

J. H. Thomson, a colored man of this city, wants the same amount from the same company. About ten days ago, while he was driving a wagon for the Winchester Tin and Stove Co., he alleges he was struck by a car near the depot. His car was split and other injuries were inflicted. He alleges the accident was caused by the carelessness of the men in charge of the train.

The largest suit on the docket is that of the Estill County Deposit Bank against the bondsmen of the late Cashier Joe McDowell which was transferred here from Irvine. Suit is brought for $29,403.55 with $1,000 interest—Winchester Democrat.

An Ingenious Swindle.
The community is warned to be on the lookout for the woman book agent who calls and leaves a volume for inspection. She doesn't take you to distraction or bore you to death soliciting you to buy it. Oh no. She simply leaves the book for you to look over, and says she will call later. This appears a very honest and businesslike way to proceed, but the next day a man calls and asks if the lady leaves the book and he does the soliciting. The book is given to him, and a day or two later the woman who left it calls. When she learns that it was given to the man, she resorts to tears, lamentations and sometimes hysterics, saying she has done it all along the street, that he must have seen her leaving the books, and followed before he had time to get back; that she is very poor and cannot afford to lose the book, but that he had no right to give it to any one but her, and give things equally convincing, until the victim pays for the book—Nicholasville Journal.

PERSONAL.

Miss Nannie Laid, of Lexington, is visiting Miss Lizzy Turley.

Mr. W. B. Bean, of Winchester, is visiting here.

Mrs. James S. Winn, of Winchester, is visiting her mother, Mrs. Miller, on 4th Avenue.

Mr. J. A. Sullivan has gone to Indian Territory to visit his sister, Mrs. Nellie Doss, who is seriously ill.

Miss Hallie Tuttle, of Irvine, spent Sunday with relatives here.

Mr. R. G. Williams, of Mt. Vernon, was here last week on business.

Miss Susie G. Stuart, of Georgetown, is visiting her sister, Mrs. Francis Tipton.

Miss Margaret Bates, of Midway, was the guest of her brother, John R., several days last week.

Miss Allie Tribble, of this city, is visiting friends and relatives in the surrounding towns.

County School Superintendent Mrs. A. T. Millon is in Frankfort, looking after needed school legislation.

Mr. W. R. Shackelford, attorney at law, was in Frankfort last week, and thinks there is more excitement in the daily papers than there is in the capital.

Miss Laura Clay is visiting her sister, Mrs. Crenshaw, in Richmond, Va. On Saturday she addressed a number of women upon the subject, "Why Woman Should Have the Ballot."—Lexington Gazette.

Miss Mary Burns has returned from Oklahoma, after an absence of two years, and will make her home with her grand parents, Mr. & C. Hunley.

Miss Flora Heath, of Richmond, is visiting Mrs. John B. Walters, Richmond. She has been spending a few days with her grandparents, Mrs. Rutherford Douglass, Mrs. S. P. Walters, Richmond.

Miss Mary Heath, of Richmond, is visiting Mrs. John B. Walters, Richmond. She has been spending a few days with her grandparents, Mrs. Rutherford Douglass, Mrs. S. P. Walters, Richmond.

On last Thursday Mr. Robert Roben Barnum gave a most beautiful luncheon to her sister Mrs. John S. Park, who left yesterday to join her husband in the city of Mexico where he is now in business. Mrs. Barnum is concealed by all who have enjoyed the gracious hospitality of her charming home to be a most graceful and charming hostess and the luncheon of Thursday will add to the laurels she has already won.

The table was decorated in pink and white and was very beautiful with glittering cut glass and silver, the soft light of pink candles and the lovely pink and white carnations that formed the exquisite and fragrant centerpiece.

A delicious luncheon was served in eight courses. The first course was the exercise of the elective franchise on account of race, color or previous conviction of crime. Because it came from the Fifteenth Amendment of the Constitution of the United States. But that Congress could not make such laws for the protection of persons in the right of suffrage, because the right to vote in the States came from the States, and had neither been "granted or secured by the Constitution of the United States." And in respect of the rights of Mrs. Minor, of Missouri, under the first section of the Fourteenth Amendment of our national Constitution in their Virginia Minor decision of 1875, the judges of the Supreme Court held that she has always been a citizen from her birth, and entitled to all the privileges and immunities of citizenship. The amendment prohibited the State of which she is a citizen from abridging any of her privileges and immunities as a citizen of the United States, but it did not confer citizenship on her; that she had been a citizen from birth.

If the right of suffrage is one of the necessary privileges of a citizen of the United States, then the Constitution and laws of Missouri, confining it to men, are in violation of the Constitution of the United States as amended and consequently void. And then decided that the right of suffrage was not one of the necessary privileges of a citizen of the United States, but that it was one of the privileges and immunities of a citizen of the United States, and that the Constitution and laws of Missouri, confining it to men, are in violation of the Constitution of the United States as amended and consequently void. And then decided that the right of suffrage was not one of the necessary privileges of a citizen of the United States, but that it was one of the privileges and immunities of a citizen of the United States, and that the Constitution and laws of Missouri, confining it to men, are in violation of the Constitution of the United States as amended and consequently void. And then decided that the right of suffrage was not one of the necessary privileges of a citizen of the United States, but that it was one of the privileges and immunities of a citizen of the United States, and that the Constitution and laws of Missouri, confining it to men, are in violation of the Constitution of the United States as amended and consequently void. And then decided that the right of suffrage was not one of the necessary privileges of a citizen of the United States, but that it was one of the privileges and immunities of a citizen of the United States, and that the Constitution and laws of Missouri, confining it to men, are in violation of the Constitution of the United States as amended and consequently void. And then decided that the right of suffrage was not one of the necessary privileges of a citizen of the United States, but that it was one of the privileges and immunities of a citizen of the United States, and that the Constitution and laws of Missouri, confining it to men, are in violation of the Constitution of the United States as amended and consequently void. And then decided that the right of suffrage was not one of the necessary privileges of a citizen of the United States, but that it was one of the privileges and immunities of a citizen of the United States, and that the Constitution and laws of Missouri, confining it to men, are in violation of the Constitution of the United States as amended and consequently void. And then decided that the right of suffrage was not one of the necessary privileges of a citizen of the United States, but that it was one of the privileges and immunities of a citizen of the United States, and that the Constitution and laws of Missouri, confining it to men, are in violation of the Constitution of the United States as amended and consequently void. And then decided that the right of suffrage was not one of the necessary privileges of a citizen of the United States, but that it was one of the privileges and immunities of a citizen of the United States, and that the Constitution and laws of Missouri, confining it to men, are in violation of the Constitution of the United States as amended and consequently void. And then decided that the right of suffrage was not one of the necessary privileges of a citizen of the United States, but that it was one of the privileges and immunities of a citizen of the United States, and that the Constitution and laws of Missouri, confining it to men, are in violation of the Constitution of the United States as amended and consequently void. And then decided that the right of suffrage was not one of the necessary privileges of a citizen of the United States, but that it was one of the privileges and immunities of a citizen of the United States, and that the Constitution and laws of Missouri, confining it to men, are in violation of the Constitution of the United States as amended and consequently void. And then decided that the right of suffrage was not one of the necessary privileges of a citizen of the United States, but that it was one of the privileges and immunities of a citizen of the United States, and that the Constitution and laws of Missouri, confining it to men, are in violation of the Constitution of the United States as amended and consequently void. And then decided that the right of suffrage was not one of the necessary privileges of a citizen of the United States, but that it was one of the privileges and immunities of a citizen of the United States, and that the Constitution and laws of Missouri, confining it to men, are in violation of the Constitution of the United States as amended and consequently void. And then decided that the right of suffrage was not one of the necessary privileges of a citizen of the United States, but that it was one of the privileges and immunities of a citizen of the United States, and that the Constitution and laws of Missouri, confining it to men, are in violation of the Constitution of the United States as amended and consequently void. And then decided that the right of suffrage was not one of the necessary privileges of a citizen of the United States, but that it was one of the privileges and immunities of a citizen of the United States, and that the Constitution and laws of Missouri, confining it to men, are in violation of the Constitution of the United States as amended and consequently void. And then decided that the right of suffrage was not one of the necessary privileges of a citizen of the United States, but that it was one of the privileges and immunities of a citizen of the United States, and that the Constitution and laws of Missouri, confining it to men, are in violation of the Constitution of the United States as amended and consequently void. And then decided that the right of suffrage was not one of the necessary privileges of a citizen of the United States, but that it was one of the privileges and immunities of a citizen of the United States, and that the Constitution and laws of Missouri, confining it to men, are in violation of the Constitution of the United States as amended and consequently void. And then decided that the right of suffrage was not one of the necessary privileges of a citizen of the United States, but that it was one of the privileges and immunities of a citizen of the United States, and that the Constitution and laws of Missouri, confining it to men, are in violation of the Constitution of the United States as amended and consequently void. And then decided that the right of suffrage was not one of the necessary privileges of a citizen of the United States, but that it was one of the privileges and immunities of a citizen of the United States, and that the Constitution and laws of Missouri, confining it to men, are in violation of the Constitution of the United States as amended and consequently void. And then decided that the right of suffrage was not one of the necessary privileges of a citizen of the United States, but that it was one of the privileges and immunities of a citizen of the United States, and that the Constitution and laws of Missouri, confining it to men, are in violation of the Constitution of the United States as amended and consequently void. And then decided that the right of suffrage was not one of the necessary privileges of a citizen of the United States, but that it was one of the privileges and immunities of a citizen of the United States, and that the Constitution and laws of Missouri, confining it to men, are in violation of the Constitution of the United States as amended and consequently void. And then decided that the right of suffrage was not one of the necessary privileges of a citizen of the United States, but that it was one of the privileges and immunities of a citizen of the United States, and that the Constitution and laws of Missouri, confining it to men, are in violation of the Constitution of the United States as amended and consequently void. And then decided that the right of suffrage was not one of the necessary privileges of a citizen of the United States, but that it was one of the privileges and immunities of a citizen of the United States, and that the Constitution and laws of Missouri, confining it to men, are in violation of the Constitution of the United States as amended and consequently void. And then decided that the right of suffrage was not one of the necessary privileges of a citizen of the United States, but that it was one of the privileges and immunities of a citizen of the United States, and that the Constitution and laws of Missouri, confining it to men, are in violation of the Constitution of the United States as amended and consequently void. And then decided that the right of suffrage was not one of the necessary privileges of a citizen of the United States, but that it was one of the privileges and immunities of a citizen of the United States, and that the Constitution and laws of Missouri, confining it to men, are in violation of the Constitution of the United States as amended and consequently void. And then decided that the right of suffrage was not one of the necessary privileges of a citizen of the United States, but that it was one of the privileges and immunities of a citizen of the United States, and that the Constitution and laws of Missouri, confining it to men, are in violation of the Constitution of the United States as amended and consequently void. And then decided that the right of suffrage was not one of the necessary privileges of a citizen of the United States, but that it was one of the privileges and immunities of a citizen of the United States, and that the Constitution and laws of Missouri, confining it to men, are in violation of the Constitution of the United States as amended and consequently void. And then decided that the right of suffrage was not one of the necessary privileges of a citizen of the United States, but that it was one of the privileges and immunities of a citizen of the United States, and that the Constitution and laws of Missouri, confining it to men, are in violation of the Constitution of the United States as amended and consequently void. And then decided that the right of suffrage was not one of the necessary privileges of a citizen of the United States, but that it was one of the privileges and immunities of a citizen of the United States, and that the Constitution and laws of Missouri, confining it to men, are in violation of the Constitution of the United States as amended and consequently void. And then decided that the right of suffrage was not one of the necessary privileges of a citizen of the United States, but that it was one of the privileges and immunities of a citizen of the United States, and that the Constitution and laws of Missouri, confining it to men, are in violation of the Constitution of the United States as amended and consequently void. And then decided that the right of suffrage was not one of the necessary privileges of a citizen of the United States, but that it was one of the privileges and immunities of a citizen of the United States, and that the Constitution and laws of Missouri, confining it to men, are in violation of the Constitution of the United States as amended and consequently void. And then decided that the right of suffrage was not one of the necessary privileges of a citizen of the United States, but that it was one of the privileges and immunities of a citizen of the United States, and that the Constitution and laws of Missouri, confining it to men, are in violation of the Constitution of the United States as amended and consequently void. And then decided that the right of suffrage was not one of the necessary privileges of a citizen of the United States, but that it was one of the privileges and immunities of a citizen of the United States, and that the Constitution and laws of Missouri, confining it to men, are in violation of the Constitution of the United States as amended and consequently void. And then decided that the right of suffrage was not one of the necessary privileges of a citizen of the United States, but that it was one of the privileges and immunities of a citizen of the United States, and that the Constitution and laws of Missouri, confining it to men, are in violation of the Constitution of the United States as amended and consequently void. And then decided that the right of suffrage was not one of the necessary privileges of a citizen of the United States, but that it was one of the privileges and immunities of a citizen of the United States, and that the Constitution and laws of Missouri, confining it to men, are in violation of the Constitution of the United States as amended and consequently void. And then decided that the right of suffrage was not one of the necessary privileges of a citizen of the United States, but that it was one of the privileges and immunities of a citizen of the United States, and that the Constitution and laws of Missouri, confining it to men, are in violation of the Constitution of the United States as amended and consequently void. And then decided that the right of suffrage was not one of the necessary privileges of a citizen of the United States, but that it was one of the privileges and immunities of a citizen of the United States, and that the Constitution and laws of Missouri, confining it to men, are in violation of the Constitution of the United States as amended and consequently void. And then decided that the right of suffrage was not one of the necessary privileges of a citizen of the United States, but that it was one of the privileges and immunities of a citizen of the United States, and that the Constitution and laws of Missouri, confining it to men, are in violation of the Constitution of the United States as amended and consequently void. And then decided that the right of suffrage was not one of the necessary privileges of a citizen of the United States, but that it was one of the privileges and immunities of a citizen of the United States, and that the Constitution and laws of Missouri, confining it to men, are in violation of the Constitution of the United States as amended and consequently void. And then decided that the right of suffrage was not one of the necessary privileges of a citizen of the United States, but that it was one of the privileges and immunities of a citizen of the United States, and that the Constitution and laws of Missouri, confining it to men, are in violation of the Constitution of the United States as amended and consequently void. And then decided that the right of suffrage was not one of the necessary privileges of a citizen of the United States, but that it was one of the privileges and immunities of a citizen of the United States, and that the Constitution and laws of Missouri, confining it to men, are in violation of the Constitution of the United States as amended and consequently void. And then decided that the right of suffrage was not one of the necessary privileges of a citizen of the United States, but that it was one of the privileges and immunities of a citizen of the United States, and that the Constitution and laws of Missouri, confining it to men, are in violation of the Constitution of the United States as amended and consequently void. And then decided that the right of suffrage was not one of the necessary privileges of a citizen of the United States, but that it was one of the privileges and immunities of a citizen of the United States, and that the Constitution and laws of Missouri, confining it to men, are in violation of the Constitution of the United States as amended and consequently void. And then decided that the right of suffrage was not one of the necessary privileges of a citizen of the United States, but that it was one of the privileges and immunities of a citizen of the United States, and that the Constitution and laws of Missouri, confining it to men, are in violation of the Constitution of the United States as amended and consequently void. And then decided that the right of suffrage was not one of the necessary privileges of a citizen of the United States, but that it was one of the privileges and immunities of a citizen of the United States, and that the Constitution and laws of Missouri, confining it to men, are in violation of the Constitution of the United States as amended and consequently void. And then decided that the right of suffrage was not one of the necessary privileges of a citizen of the United States, but that it was one of the privileges and immunities of a citizen of the United States, and that the Constitution and laws of Missouri, confining it to men, are in violation of the Constitution of the United States as amended and consequently void. And then decided that the right of suffrage was not one of the necessary privileges of a citizen of the United States, but that it was one of the privileges and immunities of a citizen of the United States, and that the Constitution and laws of Missouri, confining it to men, are in violation of the Constitution of the United States as amended and consequently void. And then decided that the right of suffrage was not one of the necessary privileges of a citizen of the United States, but that it was one of the privileges and immunities of a citizen of the United States, and that the Constitution and laws of Missouri, confining it to men, are in violation of the Constitution of the United States as amended and consequently void. And then decided that the right of suffrage was not one of the necessary privileges of a citizen of the United States, but that it was one of the privileges and immunities of a citizen of the United States, and that the Constitution and laws of Missouri, confining it to men, are in violation of the Constitution of the United States as amended and consequently void. And then decided that the right of suffrage was not one of the necessary privileges of a citizen of the United States, but that it was one of the privileges and immunities of a citizen of the United States, and that the Constitution and laws of Missouri, confining it to men, are in violation of the Constitution of the United States as amended and consequently void. And then decided that the right of suffrage was not one of the necessary privileges of a citizen of the United States, but that it was one of the privileges and immunities of a citizen of the United States, and that the Constitution and laws of Missouri, confining it to men, are in violation of the Constitution of the United States as amended and consequently void. And then decided that the right of suffrage was not one of the necessary privileges of a citizen of the United States, but that it was one of the privileges and immunities of a citizen of the United States, and that the Constitution and laws of Missouri, confining it to men, are in violation of the Constitution of the United States as amended and consequently void. And then decided that the right of suffrage was not one of the necessary privileges of a citizen of the United States, but that it was one of the privileges and immunities of a citizen of the United States, and that the Constitution and laws of Missouri, confining it to men, are in violation of the Constitution of the United States as amended and consequently void. And then decided that the right of suffrage was not one of the necessary privileges of a citizen of the United States, but that it was one of the privileges and immunities of a citizen of the United States, and that the Constitution and laws of Missouri, confining it to men, are in violation of the Constitution of the United States as amended and consequently void. And then decided that the right of suffrage was not one of the necessary privileges of a citizen of the United States, but that it was one of the privileges and immunities of a citizen of the United States, and that the Constitution and laws of Missouri, confining it to men, are in violation of the Constitution of the United States as amended and consequently void. And then decided that the right of suffrage was not one of the necessary privileges of a citizen of the United States, but that it was one of the privileges and immunities of a citizen of the United States, and that the Constitution and laws of Missouri, confining it to men, are in violation of the Constitution of the United States as amended and consequently void. And then decided that the right of suffrage was not one of the necessary privileges of a citizen of the United States, but that it was one of the privileges and immunities of a citizen of the United States, and that the Constitution and laws of Missouri, confining it to men, are in violation of the Constitution of the United States as amended and consequently void. And then decided that the right of suffrage was not one of the necessary privileges of a citizen of the United States, but that it was one of the privileges and immunities of a citizen of the United States, and that the Constitution and laws of Missouri, confining it to men, are in violation of the Constitution of the United States as amended and consequently void. And then decided that the right of suffrage was not one of the necessary privileges of a citizen of the United States, but that it was one of the privileges and immunities of a citizen of the United States, and that the Constitution and laws of Missouri, confining it to men, are in violation of the Constitution of the United States as amended and consequently void. And then decided that the right of suffrage was not one of the necessary privileges of a citizen of the United States, but that it was one of the privileges and immunities of a citizen of the United States, and that the Constitution and laws of Missouri, confining it to men, are in violation of the Constitution of the United States as amended and consequently void. And then decided that the right of suffrage was not one of the necessary privileges of a citizen of the United States, but that it was one of the privileges and immunities of a citizen

